

This is how an efficient food traceability system works.

If you have a food business, ensuring that you provide your customers with safe food is a top priority.
That's why you are legally required to implement a food traceability system.

Trusting the safety of goods or ingredients coming in means you can have confidence in products going out.
By adopting this 'one up, one down' traceability system, you can quickly identify and remove any unsafe products should the need arise. This way you're safeguarding public health and maintaining confidence in the food supply chain.

Makes good business sense, we think you'll agree. When it comes to food, the simple message is: be traceable.
